Taking blood from a finger

This is called a capillary sample.

This is mostly to take a blood glucose sample to measure the amount of sugar that is in the blood.

This is mostly used by diabetics so they can administer their insulin depending on this result.

To take blood from a finger, it is best and safest practice to use a lancet as your chosen piece of equipment.

Picture owned by medonic.se